The Master of Arts builds on the training you already have.

At Bellevue University we understand that learning doesn't only happen in our classrooms. Bellevue University is a leader in working with adult students to assess previous college credits you may have earned, whether inside a classroom, a workplace, or through life experience.

Be Knowledgeable.
Be Prepared.
Be Rewarded.

Through a unique partnership with Young Israel Educational Programs, Inc., Bellevue University accepts bachelor's degrees from any regionally accredited or Association of Advanced Rabbinical and Talmudic Schools accredited or affiliated institution. Bellevue University also awards as many as 6 credit hours for past college courses, rabbinic training and life experience. These credits can be applied toward a 36-credit-hour Master of Arts Degree in Educational Leadership. Awarded college credits must be earned at the graduate level.

Bellevue University ranks among the nation's elite universities for its ability to develop leaders ahead of Yale, Stanford, Pepperdine, and Carnegie Mellon. For the second year in a row, Leadership Excellence magazine has recognized Bellevue University's Leadership Development program as one of the best in the nation... and we ranked ahead of some impressive competition. The criteria for this prestigious designation include: ■ Vision ■ Accountability ■ Involvement ■ Content ■ Curriculum ■ Delivery ■ Take-home value

Bellevue University's Master of Arts combines theory and philosophy with real-life application.

The Master of Arts program utilizes an adult-learning format, and is comprised of courses that encourage individual thought, synthesis of group contribution, and assimilation of practical and theoretical teachings. Its mission is to combine philosophy with the real-life application of those concepts and theoretical models.

In the Master of Arts program all students take a core group of educational leadership courses, delving into the subject of leadership, examining it from numerous perspectives. In addition, the student will take additional courses, in a variety of concentrations, to enhance their education and skills.
